A pair of CIA operatives wage an epic battle against one another when they discover they are dating the same woman. Two CIA agents, Tuck and Frank who are also best friends, have been benched because someone's after them. Tuck is divorced with a son whom he's not close to and Frank is a ladies man. Tuck decides to try and find someone so he places his profile on a dating website. Lauren, a woman also looking for a guy sees Tuck's profile and goes with him. She later bumps into Frank and he hits on her and she goes out with him. She's intrigued by both of them. When they learn that they're dating the same girl, they agree to let her choose. But both can't help but use their skills to keep tabs on her and each other. And also sabotage each other's dates with her. "It's spy against spy." This Means War is a really silly and predictable film, but I had a great time with it thanks to the excellent cast. Tom Hardy, Chris Pine, and Reese Witherspoon are great actors, and they prove it in this film in which they turn mediocre material into an extremely fun film. I couldn't stop laughing while seeing Tom Hardy in action. He is one of my favorite actors and you can hardly recognize him in most of his films. I never expected to see him in a rom-com like this, and I usually hate most of these predictable and painfully unfunny films, but This Means War is the exception. It could be my new guilty pleasure, considering it did get trashed by most of the critics. Everyone in the theater I saw it with was laughing hysterically, so I guess I wasn't the only one. This film was directed by McG, the man who brought the Charlie's Angels to the big screen, and this might be my favorite film of his (although that isn't saying much because I pretty much hated his other movies). The screenplay was written by Timothy Dowling and Simon Kinberg. It isn't really funny, but the actors make the movie and the jokes better. I guess Chelsea Handler wrote all her lines herself because it sounded like the advice she would truly give her friends on TV. I wasn't too much of a fan of her character, but the rest of the cast made the film for me. I knew everything that was going to happen, even the twist at the end, but that didn't ruin the film one bit; it was seeing Hardy in this role I'd never think I'd see him in that made this such a pleasant experience. Witherspoon and Pine held their par as well. This is no Lethal Weapon, but it still was entertaining.

FDR Foster (Chris Pine) and Tuck (Tom Hardy) are spies working for the CIA. After their latest assignment blows out of proportions and leaves several people dead, their boss takes them off the field and assigns them to office duties only. FDR and Tuck were made for the field, so life in the office grows increasingly tedious for them. Besides working together, they are great friends. FDR is a ladies' man; he is good at hitting on girls and having one night stands with them, while Tuck has a harder time finding a woman after his latest marriage failed. He does have a six year old son named Joe. Tuck decides to try his luck on a dating website so he publishes his picture and description hoping he can meet a nice girl. Lauren (Reese Witherspoon), who left Atlanta for a man that later left her for another woman, is now an independent working woman who hasn't really dated anyone seriously after being dumped. Her best friend, Trish (Chelsea Handler), places a profile of her on the dating website without her permission. When Lauren finds out she ends up seeing Tuck's picture in the site and decides to give it a try. The date goes well, but later Lauren runs into FDR who also makes a move on her (having not realized that she is the girl Tuck is dating). Both FDR and Tuck realize they're dating the same woman and decide to compete for her without letting her know they know each other. They make a gentleman's agreement and don't think this situation will harm their friendship one bit, but what will happen when both men fall for her?

The story is pretty simple and we've seen it before, but it's the actors that make the movie so much fun. I focused mainly on the romantic triangle because that is the center of the movie, although there is a pretty ridiculous side plot dealing with a villain named Heinrich (Til Schweiger), but that story doesn't do much for the film really. I guess they placed it there to keep some of the guys interested and have some action scenes, although the scenes are really cartoonish and dumb. The fun in this film isn't trying to guess who Lauren will choose, but really seeing these two men fighting each other and trying to boycott each other's date. Pine and Hardy are two excellent action stars, but I hadn't seen them in this sort of role before and they were great in it. I laughed at most of the goofy moments, and I can see how so many critics hated it, but I can also see why so many people got a kick out of this movie as well. This Means War isn't a memorable film, it won't win any awards, but it is an entertaining movie and an interesting option for a date movie. I really had a blast with this film; my new guilty pleasure.

<http://estebueno10.blogspot.com> I normally have a guessing game after a movie I have been to see which is "how would it rate on IMDb" . I guessed that this movie would have rated better than it did but that is unusual, normally I am within .1 or .2. So why did I think this was better than most?. I'll be quick. Chris Pine and Tom Hardy have great chemistry even if Tom Hardy is streets ahead with his acting chops than anyone else in this movie. Actually that's it really. It has got it's moments early on and does keep the attention with a few lifts in interest as the movie paces along nicely. Where I think it fell flat was Reese Witherspoon, far and away the wrong actress for this movie. Kristen Whig? Anyone but Reese. I really think Tom Hardy rescues this movie and should they make a sequel then they have a lot to work from to decide where this film went wrong and where it went right. So when I come to decide on my rating I can't give it a halfway mark and I think giving it a six would be cruel for this, seven is generous and a rating reserved for "worth seeing at the cinema".. you know what, it is - just. "War" is depressingly mean-spirited. This Means War is based on a screenplay co-written by Timothy Dowling, Marcus Gautesen, and Simon Kinberg (who also co-produced). "Good Love" by Kram. The song was Woman by the Australian rock band Wolfmother. It has become a common phenomenon that Director's Cuts are only released on Blu-ray disc, which also is the case here. Since May 22th, 2012, it has been available for purchase in US shops. A direct comparison of the two versions identifies the Director's Cut as a bluff package. The only "sexual" content is a harmless intro in a James Bond style. The most of the additional running time consists of the 'fake family scene', in which Tuck Henson pays a few actors to play his family in order to impress Lauren. In order to get the more lucrative PG-13 for its theatrical release, some "sleazy" scenes needed to be removed. The PG-13 version is also the version that has been released on DVD in several countries. a5c7b9f00b
